

The Europe of “No” that Never Has an Idea

The Court of Strasbourg rejected the crime of “clandestine immigration”: this is the last of many stops that the Union imposed about this problem. But Brussels never was able to propose solutions starting from the invasion of Lampedusa and ending up with the Roms.

by Ida Magli

Il Giornale, April 29th, 2011

Once again, the European Union said “no” to an Italian regulation against illegal immigrants. It forbids clandestine access and residence; but to the Union clandestinity is not a crime. Europe was never able to solve the very grave problems that we have; the answer always is “no”, forbidding any solution in favor of Italy. Therefore we must look at this fact, and we must analyze its various aspects before deciding what we will do. The European Union is founded on the assumption that all member States are “equal”. Canceling national borders, the territory becomes just one, and also populations, customs and laws become one. The main instrument to achieve “equality”, passing over the differences among peoples, is the Human rights Chart, which is referring to single individuals, bypassing any group. In this way every social aggregation disappears: family, nation, culture, religion; we are going ahead directly towards Universality. To the Economists and Bankers, Universality means world market and – in a near future – global government. Unfortunately, the European States persist in being unequal, even in the fundamentals. If we compare the States that are more similar to Italy, we find out that, for example, France measures 547.030 square kilometers and Spain 504.782, twice as much as Italy’s 301.230 square kilometers; and Italy is made of mountains, rivers and shores which cannot be inhabited. On the other hand, the population density is far higher in Italy: 197 inhabitants per square kilometer, compared to 111 in France and 80 in Spain. Libya, for example, is five times larger than Italy, with 1.759.540 square kilometers and 3,4 inhabitants.

Italy always was able to remain “Italy” because of the marvelous creations of thought that are one of its trademarks, in art, science, music, law, literature. This is because – notwithstanding its geographical position - Italy always made the maximum effort to defend itself from all those who wanted to live there: pirates, barbarians, Muslims. If we give up this defense, in a very short time Italians and Italianity will die. Italy should never have undersigned the Schengen Treaty, just because of its geographical position. But since we did, we must somehow run for cover, suspending the Schengen treaty as also France proposed to; at the same time we must gain some extra time to convince the European Union to change those rules that are clashing against any common sense, and are endangering the very same cultural and physical survival of the Peoples. For a People, the territory (Homeland) is like home, and the borders are its front door. It seems that entering in someone else’s home is not a crime any more: thieves will be happy to hear that. We hope that the Left will cooperate to convince Europe, notwithstanding the aura of intangibility that they built around it. In front of any word coming from Brussels, the Left automatically considers it as “sacred”. This reminds another very unpleasant “sacralization”, towards the Soviet Union. But this time the survival of Italy is at stake: let us try to be and behave just as Italians.

Ida Magli Rome, april 28th, 2011