

The new Duma

by Ida Magli

ItalianiLiberi | December 4th, 2011

Finally the planners of the European Union took off their mask. A weak one, transparent, almost useless, a mask that they wore until now - but still a mask. Market, market, market; finance, finance, finance; and most of all: democracy, democracy, democracy. From now on, not any more. Down with Democracy, up with Dictatorship. The New York Times is celebrating its new hero: King George [Napolitano, the Italian President] who with just one stroke succeeded in handing over the government of Italy to a person who was never elected. He transformed the Italian Parliament into a Duma [the Soviet parliament]; he had a deep nostalgia of the Duma, where there was one single Party that always approved the decisions made by Stalin.

Now we see the real purpose of the "debt" question. The bankers of Europe and of the whole world keep repeating that the Nations are on the verge of collapse not because they gave up their monetary sovereignty, but because they did not give up all their sovereignty: financial government, taxes, pensions, foreign policy... In brief: what do Nations want? Do they still pretend to be Nations? Do they want to keep some kind of sovereignty? This is just "Piigs" nonsense. If national governments had not interfered, the Euro could have been the strongest currency of the world. They must learn from the "model schoolboy": Germany! Germany is the smartest one! Germany just had to change the name of its currency and is doing business with all the world, especially with its nice neighbor, Russia. After all it was the great Guru, Mr. Kohl who set the value of the euro, equal to the Mark. What about those who had the Lira or the Drachma, whose value was less than a hundredth of the Mark? It was their governors who betrayed them, so what's the matter? They can keep on limping; Germans are not supposed to worry about their allies or subjects. In the European Union allies and subjects coincide: they just have to obey and do their homework.

Now we are at the point of no return. Citizens do not have any power - unless they chose to rebel, something that nobody is wishing. Italian parliamentarians are the ones who still have a possibility to save Italy as a sovereign and independent State, if they do not betray their fellow citizens. If we keep on walking towards the European unification, we will be totally dominated by the bankers, we will lose all our freedom and we will become poorer because of the rising amount of our debt. One thing is certain: if a State does not have its own currency, but a common currency for which is paying interests to the Central European Bank, we can only see our debt rise, and we will have limited opportunities on the market. Parliamentarians must think if they want to be remembered in History because they voted YES, approving all this. If they have any doubt, they should ask the voters to make the decision: promoting a referendum on the European Union.

Ida Magli

www.italianiliberi.it

Rome, December 3rd, 2011

Traduzione a cura di Marina Mascetti